

New London's Ferry Trouble Self Made

(Special to The Bulletin.)

New London, Sept. 3.—If New London has its way, and it generally tries to in matters legislative, the special session of the legislature called for the 14th inst., by Governor Holcomb, to fix up the election laws so that qualified women may vote in the November election, will not be confined to that special and important business. The city authorities, through the ferry commission, are laying plans to tug the Groton-New London ferry business in for action. The city has its nose, so to speak, up against a grindstone of its own making and is now crying for help. It is merely a matter of time before the city, taken up by the then mayor of the city, that caused the city meeting to vote to take over the ferry into municipal management.

There was not a man in that big meeting but had full knowledge that the old railroad bridge was to be converted into a state highway, and knew it would mean a big depreciation of the ferry business, still after listening to advocates of municipal management and the almost positive assurance that there would be no expense in entering the ferry business, except the first cost of $14,000 for the purchase of the equipment of the Thames Ferry company, and after that it would be all profit, easy money, velvet for the city, the electors voted the appropriation and favored municipal management, bridge or no bridge.

It was practically given out that the alleged big returns of the ferry company ought to go into the city treasury instead of that of the ferry company, and that the city did not stand to lose under any circumstances. The lease of the Thames Ferry company was not renewed. The taxpayers of New London know the rest. The action was a municipal blunder, and the worst is yet to come.

The promoters of municipal management of the ferry, the men who were puffed at the men connected with the Thames Ferry company, the men opposed to renewal of the lease at a reduced rental, in view of the coming of the bridge highway, are now humbly asking legislative relief. If business other than that for which the special session is called is permitted, it is a safe bet that New London will seek relief from its present losing proposition in the ferry business. Just exactly the form of relief is to the dependent unknown. The city may have the nerve to ask the state to take over the ferry business and relieve the city of the self-imposed burden. It is quite probable that the city will ask for authority to increase the ferry rates which were fixed several years ago by legislative action. To this proposition there will be strong opposition from Groton. By the way Groton was barred from participation in the ferry franchise and new New London may be inclined to force that town into partnership in the ferry business.

If the business of the special session is done in accordance with the rules of the legislature, all business presented must be referred to a committee, given public hearing and then reported back to the house where the measure originated, with recommendation of passage or rejection. Therefore it is plain that if business other than that of mending the election laws is admitted, the business of the special session will not be finished in a day, nor a week, should the regular routine prevail and additional business admitted, the special session would continue for at least a month. Guess the Groton ferry matter will go over to the regular session.

There were two free, two hold-ups, two men shot and all in one night in New London this week, besides a bunch of other local happenings, and yet the people could not get reports of the occurrences until the evening of the next day, as there is no morning newspaper in New London at the present time, and no newspaper in circulation here that carries the New London news. It hardly seems probable that a city the size of New London with a regular population of nearly 24,000 does not have a morning newspaper. The Telegraph passed from the morning into the Sunday field more than a month ago, giving as the reason the high cost and scarcity of news print paper. That may have been the cause. But if the proper support support had been given the morning newspaper the matter of news print might have caused inconvenience but probably not suspension. The management of The Telegraph said the suspension was temporary, and would resume when conditions changed. That is all right and the return of The Telegraph would be welcome, but in the meantime must the people of New London be compelled to wait to read of happenings of the night before the night after? Some day somebody is liable to supply the New London news to New Londoners while it is news.

It is matter worthy the consideration of the Chamber of Commerce. The resumption of The Telegraph would be the best bit of news in many a day. It is of more real benefit to the town than the average manufacturing industry, and ought to receive public encouragement and support. There is actual need for the morning newspaper. The people want the news, all the news, and while it is news, and the morning newspaper that furnished it is entitled to encouragement and substantial support.

There were no contests in the caucuses of democracy, and in some of the wards there were barely democrats enough to fill the delegation to the town convention, there, nominating delegates to the general conventions to be held in the near future. There was evident lack of leadership at that particular nomination time which is interpreted to mean that the faction in the saddle had no money to drive. It so happened, however, that in each ward the predominant factor held the driving rein, yet showed a spirit of magnanimity in splitting up the delegates, but holding to the majority. The town convention that followed the caucus was no cut-and-dried affair. Each ward was represented on the committee to submit lists of names for delegates to the state, the congressional, the senatorial and probate conventions. The committee had no prepared lists handed in for consideration, or anything of that kind, but the selection was left entirely with the committee.

That nominating committee deliberated for an hour and then presented lists of delegates that were approved without opposition by the convention. No lists like these were ever before handed in to a political convention in New London, republican or democratic. On each delegation were representatives of both factions of the party, and the names of women as delegates was the surprising climax. The convention swallowed the nominations without a hitch, line and sinker. All of the delegates were selected without their prior knowledge or consent, and as a result there are already several declarations to serve. With real leadership, there would have been no such conglomeration of delegates and every delegate nominated would stick to the ship, sink, swim or drown. Just why his lack of leadership not apparent to the uninformed? Perhaps it is well that it is so.

William C. Fox is the only democrat on the nominating committee, and therefore it would be safe for him to contract for the big feed usually given to delegates by the candidate directly after the nominating caucus adjourns. Mr. Fox was elected senator two years ago and prior to the session of 1915, was a representative in the 1917 session. This merely indicates that he has had some experience in the political game, and is not a novice. Since the 1914 adjournment, and will not let up until the ballots are counted on election day.

If a Groton man is nominated to oppose Fox that man will probably be "Conny" Costello. He is a resident of Groton but a regular New London boomer, but it is a question as to just where he stands on the ferry question. It can be put down as fact, however, that he will be on the right side, as the right side looks to him. It will require all the political astuteness of this particular fox to catch "Conny" off the political roost if he is nominated. Since Costello came to his employment in New London he has been busy building up his popularity as president of the Rotary club, director of the Chamber of Commerce and foremost in all the recent community work. Over Myrtle way, his hailing port, he was once one of the most active politicians in the town, and yet he was the game works as he does the workings of a watch, and he is expert in the watch, working line. That's his business.

Ocean's Bed.

To an enormous extent the bed of the ocean is covered with lava and pumice stone, and the floor of the ocean is covered in many parts with the dust of meteorites.

These bodies whirl about in the heavens like miniature comets, and are for the most part broken into innumerable fragments.

It has been only lately discovered that this cosmic dust forms layers at the bottom of the deepest seas. Between Honolulu and Tahiti, at a depth of 2,515 fathoms—over two miles and a half—a vast layer of this material exists.

Falling upon land, this "impalpable dust is indistinguishable; but, accumulating for centuries in the sea depths, it forms a wondrous story of the continuous bombardment of this planet by cometary bodies.—Detroit News.
